He has spent much of his youth participating in demonstrations and activities intended to both increase awareness, and demand social and environmental justice for low income communities and communities of color. Carter's interest in joining the Seattle Youth Commission is also fueled by his desire to advocate for local homeless youth and families. Carter believes citizen involvement in local government is an essential way to enact positive change in his community, and hopes to learn a great deal about policy making, as well as how the political process works. Carter also enjoys rowing, basketball, and videogames. He is a recipient of a George Pocock Rowing Foundation Youth Scholarship, and will be rowing on the Junior Boys Rowing Team at the Pocock Rowing Center.
