Glen Lee serves as the City of Seattle's Finance Director where he is responsible for the City's enterprise accounting, treasury, debt management, risk management, and payroll functions. Glen also oversees the City's tax administration operation. Glen leads a coalition of Washington cities to implement a multi-jurisdictional business licensing and tax filing system. In addition, Glen is the Executive Sponsor of the City's implementation of an Enterprise Resource Planning system.

Glen serves as a member of the board to each of the City's three separate pension systems as well as a member of the City employees' Deferred Compensation Trust Board. Glen was first appointed as the City Finance Director in 2010. Prior to his appointment, Glen managed the City's fiscal forecasting and budget development functions in the City's Budget Office. He has been with the City since 1994.

Glen has served on several advisory groups including the Association of Washington Cities' Legislative Fiscal Subcommittee, the Streamlined Tax Mitigation Advisory Committee of the Washington Department of Revenue, and Seattle Public School's Advisory Committee for Investing in Educational Excellence. In addition, Glen consulted with officials from the Republic of Poland who were implementing a property tax system to support that nation's local governments.

Glen was an instructor for the Government Finance Officers Association and served on the Economics Department Advisory Board for Seattle University.

Before joining the City, Glen was a Fiscal and Policy Analyst with the State of California's Legislative Analyst's Office in Sacramento, California. His assignments with the Office included tax policy, revenue forecasting, and tax administration.

Glen has an undergraduate degree in economics from the University of California, Berkeley. Glen and his wife Barbara live in Bellevue, Washington and have two adult children.
