

City of Seattle
2019 State Legislative Bulletin

January 28, 2019

Number 2

Almost 1,500 bills have been introduced so far this session. Despite this large number of bills having been introduced, we are seeing an interesting trend this session of some bills being slower to be introduced. It is not abnormal for bills to take awhile to get drafted, secure sponsors, and then get introduced. But for being through the second week of session, we are still hearing a lot of bills not being introduced yet. Some bills even had hearings on the draft version without an official bill being introduced, which is fairly uncommon. Bills might get scheduled before they're introduced, but usually the bill ends up being officially introduced in time for the hearing.

The first cutoff date is not until the February 22 policy committee deadline. This is the date by which a bill must be passed out of its house of origin committee in order to stay alive. There are exceptions to this cutoff for bills in fiscal committees and bills necessary to implement the budget but this will cut back on the number of bills that are still up for consideration. Our priority is to work to ensure our critical legislation is introduced and begins to move through the legislative process.
