EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

On June 6, 2017, the Seattle City Council passed Ordinance 125324 to tax sugar-sweetened beverages distributed in Seattle. The tax on sugar-sweetened beverages is 1.75 cents per ounce and went into effect on January 1, 2018. In response to the excise tax, distributors are expected to increase sugary beverage prices for retailers. Retailers, in turn, are expected to increase the shelf prices of sugary beverages paid by consumers, thus deterring purchases. The effectiveness of an excise tax in reducing sugary beverage consumption hinges partly on its “pass-through rate,” or the extent to which the tax is passed on to consumers through higher shelf prices.

This report summarizes the mid-year results from one component of the evaluation of the Sweetened Beverage Tax. Specifically, we conducted mid-year store audits to assess whether the tax is passed on to consumers via higher retail prices of taxed beverages. We also studied whether the price of non-taxed beverages would increase since distributors and retailers may choose to spread the cost of the tax over a variety of products.

In October and November of 2017, before the tax was implemented, we surveyed pre-tax prices of beverages that would be subject to the tax and beverages that would not be subject to the tax, using in-person store audits. In June and July of 2018, approximately six months after the tax was implemented, we repeated the store audits. We selected a geographically-balanced sample of stores and restaurants in Seattle and a comparison area (Federal Way, Kent, and Auburn) to audit. We surveyed 27,223 beverages within 413 stores or restaurants. We analyzed the change in prices in Seattle, above and beyond changes observed in the comparison area, to estimate the impact of the tax on the prices of taxed beverages. We calculated “pass-through” rates by dividing the price increase (in cents per ounce) by the total amount of the tax (1.75 cents per ounce).

Key findings: Six months after implementation, this study finds that the tax on sugary beverages incurred by distributors is being passed through to consumers via higher retail prices of these beverages. This confirms the hypothesized result of the tax. (A separate study of the impact of the tax on beverage consumption is underway.)

On average, prices increased for nearly all beverage types subject to the tax.

In Seattle, averaging across all store types and beverage types, the price of beverages subject to the tax in Seattle increased by an average of 1.70 cents per ounce, over and above increases seen in the comparison area. Since the tax is 1.75 cents per ounce, this indicates 97% price pass-through of the tax on average.

Price increases differed by beverage type.

In Seattle, all beverages subject to the tax increased significantly in price, with the exception of the caloric flavor-syrup add-on at coffee shops. The average pass-through rate by beverage type for beverages subject to the tax ranged from 62% for bottled sugary coffee beverages to 111% for energy beverages. The average pass-through rate for soda was 102%.

Price increases in Seattle differed by store type.

In supermarkets and superstores: while the price of taxed beverages increased (with average pass-through of 86%), the price of non-taxed beverages did not increase significantly.

In grocery stores, drug stores, and small stores: the price of taxed beverages increased significantly, with an average pass-through greater than 100% (1.82 cents per ounce in grocery and drug stores and 1.80 cents per ounce in small stores). In these store categories, on average the price of non-taxed beverages also increased significantly. The price increase was 0.47 cents per ounce in grocery and drug stores and 0.77 cents per ounce in small stores (which equals 27% and 44% of the size of the tax). In these types of stores, the price increases among non-taxed beverages appears to be due to increases in the price of diet soda, diet energy beverages, and to a lesser extent, bottled tea and diet sports beverages. The price of bottled water did not increase and, in the majority of store types, the price of milk also did not increase.

SECTION 1 | TAXED AND NON-TAXED BEVERAGE PRICES USING STORE AUDITS

OBJECTIVE

The primary objective of the store audits is to determine the extent to which the tax on sugary beverages incurred by distributors in Seattle is passed through to customers (“price pass-through”). We additionally assess the degree to which the price of non-taxed beverages changes, as well as the average price change in a sample of foods.

METHODS

Sample.

To obtain our sample of stores at baseline (pre-tax implementation), first we identified all food stores in Seattle and our comparison area based on a list of all permitted, permanent food establishments in 2016, maintained by Public Health Seattle King County (PHSKC). The Urban Form Lab at the University of Washington previously created algorithms to classify each of these businesses into meaningful food store or restaurant categories (supermarkets, grocery stores, corner stores, counter-service restaurants, etc.). Store definitions are provided in Appendix A. We used this classification to initially categorize stores and restaurants and then updated the category as necessary when we visited each store or restaurant.

We aimed for a geographically balanced sample of food stores (supermarkets, grocery stores, corner stores, gas stations), coffee shops, and counter-service restaurants in Seattle and in the comparison area (Federal Way, Kent, and Auburn). At baseline, when selecting our store sample, we obtained geographic balance by dividing our study areas (Seattle, Figure 1, and comparison area, Figure 2) into 16 equal-sized areas, geocoding all the food establishments, then selecting a quota of stores from each store type within each of the 16 areas.

In addition to the sample derived from the above process, we also worked with community liaisons and used “minority-owned business” lists to sample small stores and counter-service restaurants owned by people of color; we included this additional community-based sampling approach due both to the anticipation that these stores may be more affected by the tax and the expressed interest of the City of Seattle and the Community Advisory Board in ensuring these stores were represented in the sample.

During the 6-month follow up survey, we revisited every store included in the baseline sample and attempted to re-survey the prices of items in each store.

Data collectors attended one six-hour training, then practiced data collection in the field until 90% raw agreement on responses was achieved. Two of our data collectors also collected data for the baseline survey and they attended the trainings again before the six-month data collection. We conducted all in-store audits between October 23 and November 22, 2017 for the pre-tax, baseline assessment. The six-month, post-tax follow-up audits were conducted between May 21 and July 20 2018. We paused data collection the week of July 4 to minimize capturing holiday-specific sales and returned to stores during the weeks of July 9-20 to finish the six-month data collection.

Data collection.

Within each store we measured the availability and prices of: soda, sports and energy drinks, teas and coffees, juices, powdered drink mixes, water, milks, fountain drinks, and a handful of snack and sugary foods. We collected prices from 25 unique taxed beverages, 32 unique non-taxed sugar-free or diet beverages, and nine unique non-taxed sugar-sweetened beverages (e.g., flavored milk). Appendix C contains the survey instruments. Table 1 shows all surveyed beverages by beverage type and beverage tax category. For each beverage listed, we recorded the pricing and availability of multiple packaging sizes (e.g., 12oz cans, 20oz bottles, 1 liter bottles, 12 packs of 12oz cans). We additionally surveyed the price of six packaged snack and sugary food items: Little Debbie Honey Buns, Frosted Flakes, Lays Original Potato Chips, Oreos, Pringles, Reese's Peanut Butter Cups.

Variables.

Beverage prices. The primary outcome of interest is the price of beverages, which we express as cents per ounce. We collected regular and discounted prices for all surveyed beverages. For these analyses, we use the lowest price at which each beverage could have been purchased on the day the store was surveyed. As described below, for stores that did not increase the shelf price, but did add a beverage tax at purchase, the add-on price was added to the shelf price in our dataset to create a total price.

Because we were aware that some stores were not changing the shelf price and instead just indicating on the shelf tag that a beverage tax would be added at the register, we developed, tested, and validated collection methods that would enable us to capture the actual price paid. In our pilot work, we visited a minimum of three stores in each store type category shortly before the six-month data collection began and took pictures of the variety of ways that stores were choosing to alert consumers to the beverage tax (or not). In each of these stores, we spoke with store managers or store staff to ask how, if at all, they had changed prices as a result of the tax. We additionally purchased 10-20 taxed and non-taxed beverages from nine of these stores to fully understand how the tax was being processed at the register. From this pilot data collection, we determined that five categories of “pricing type” would capture the majority of ways in which stores were marking shelf tags to indicate the presence of the tax (see Figures 3.1-3.5 for examples): 1) no mention of the tax on the price tag, 2) the tax price was written on the price tag as an add-on amount and not included in total price listed, 3) the tax price was included in the total price on price tag, and identified as an add-on amount, 4) the tax price was included in the total price on price tag but not identified as an add-on amount, and 5) the price tag stated that the tax would be added at register and this add-on price was not included on the price tag. For beverages that followed #2, #3, and #4, the final price of the beverage plus beverage tax was obvious and data collectors collected this price. For beverages that followed #1, our pilot testing revealed that the price of the tax was incorporated in the shelf price already, so we collected the shelf price only in this scenario since it reflected the total price for purchasing the beverage. For beverages that followed #5, our pilot testing revealed that the tax was applied only to sugary beverages in Seattle subject to the tax and was not applied to sugar-free beverages (not subject to the tax). Therefore, for stores using this “pricing type,” data collectors purchased a diet and a regular soda to obtain the total price, including any add-on at the register. Using this add-on price from the purchased beverage, we calculated the store's price per ounce add-on, which we then applied to all taxed beverages at that store. So, for example, if an energy drink was marked with a shelf price and a tag that said, “plus beverage tax,” we calculated the total price by summing the shelf price, plus the amount of beverage tax (in cents per ounce) added by that store. Our pilot testing revealed that stores with this type of pricing strategy consistently applied the same tax per ounce for all beverages subject to the tax, so we obtained the beverage tax for each store from the receipt from our purchase of a diet and a regular beverage.

Beverage types. We grouped similar beverages together to form 22 “beverage types,” (i.e., soda, energy drinks, juice, juice drink, etc.). Table 1 (above) displays the beverage types and lists beverages in each beverage type category.

Beverage tax categories. We then further grouped beverage types into three aggregate categories, according to both their added sweetener content and whether they are subject to the Seattle Sweetened Beverage Tax: taxed, non-taxed sugar-free, and non-taxed sugar-sweetened. Beverages in the comparison area are grouped into these same categories to make comparison, but none of these beverages are subject to the Seattle Sweetened Beverage Tax if they are distributed and sold outside Seattle.

Store type. We included 5 different categories of stores or restaurants: Superstores/supermarkets, grocery stores and drug stores, small stores, counter-service restaurants, and beverage shops (coffee or tea). Definitions for each store or restaurant type are provided in Appendix A.

Statistical analysis.

Tax impact analyses.

Our primary analyses aim to estimate the impact of the tax on the price of beverages subject to the tax. To do this, we use a regression-based difference-in-difference model to estimate the degree to which the price of beverages in Seattle changed above and beyond price changes for the same beverages in the comparison area. We do this for taxed beverages and non-taxed beverages. Specifically, we ran ordinary least squares models with standard errors adjusting for clustering at the store level of the general form:

$$Y_{it} = \beta_0 + \beta_1(\text{city})_i + \beta_2(\text{time})_t + \beta_3(\text{city} \times \text{time})_t + \epsilon_{it},$$

where,  $Y_{it}$  is the price per ounce of beverage  $i$  at time  $t$ . City is an indicator variable that takes the value of 1 for observations in Seattle and 0 for observations in the comparison area; this controls for baseline differences in prices between Seattle and the comparison area. Time is an indicator variable that takes the value of 1 for prices measured in the post-tax period and 0 for prices measured in the pre-tax period; this controls for the time trend we could have expected to see had Seattle not implemented the tax. The coefficient on the interaction between city and time ( $\text{city} \times \text{time}$ ),  $\beta_3$ , is the difference-in-difference estimator. It estimates the average change in prices in Seattle above and beyond the change in prices in the comparison area and is our estimate of the impact of the tax on the prices of taxed beverages. This is also our estimate of the tax pass-through. A pass-through of the tax of 100% would mean  $\beta_3 = 1.75$ , meaning that the price of beverages subject to the tax rose an additional 1.75 cents per ounce above and beyond the change seen

Figure 3.5 Price tag says tax will be added at register (e.g., “plus beverage tax”), and does not include specific add-on amount on price tag (#5) in the comparison area.

Using these same difference-in-difference models, we then run models stratified by beverage type, since previous studies have noted different pass-throughs of the tax by beverage type. We do this for both taxed and non-taxed beverages, separately.

We then stratify by store type and estimate the difference-in-difference for taxed and non-taxed beverages (aggregate categories) by store type. In these models, we combine the taxed and non-taxed beverages in one model to derive the difference-in-difference estimate for each and to also derive a triple difference estimate for each store type, which further subtracts the differential change in the price of taxed beverages (compared to non-taxed) in the comparison area from that in Seattle. Specifically, we estimated the following linear regression model using ordinary least squares with standard errors adjusted for clustering within stores:

$$Y_{ijst} = \beta_0 + \beta_1(\text{city})_j + \beta_2(\text{taxed})_s + \beta_3(\text{time})_t + \beta_4(\text{city}_j \times \text{taxed}_s) + \beta_5(\text{city}_j \times \text{time}_t) + \beta_6(\text{taxed}_s \times \text{time}_t) + \beta_7(\text{city}_j \times \text{taxed}_s \times \text{time}_t) + \epsilon_{ijst}$$

Here,  $Y_{ijst}$  is the observed the price of beverage  $i$  in city  $j$  in taxed category  $s$  at time  $t$ , city is an indicator variable that takes the value of 1 for beverages in Seattle and 0 for beverages in the comparison area, taxed is an indicator variable that takes the value of 1 if the beverage is subject to the tax in Seattle and 0 if the beverage is not subject to the tax in Seattle, time is an indicator variable that takes the value of 1 for prices measured in the post-tax period and 0 for prices measured in the pre-tax period. The city indicator variable controls for different price levels between Seattle and the comparison area even before the tax, the taxed indicator variable controls for different price levels between taxed and non-taxed beverages in both cities, even without the tax, and the time indicator variable controls for differences in prices that are a function of seasonality or the passage of time that would exist in both areas regardless of whether the tax was imposed. The interaction terms control for additional heterogeneity in the average prices that may also exist, even in the absence of the tax. For example, the average price of taxed beverages in Seattle may be higher or lower than the average price of other beverages. The interaction between city and taxed (cityXtaxed) would control for this. Other potential problems could occur if the average price of all taxed and non-taxed beverages rose faster in Seattle than in the comparison area [the interaction between city and time indicator variables (cityXtime) would control for this] or if the average price of taxed beverages rose faster than the average price of non-taxed beverages, regardless of the area [the interaction between the taxed and time indicator variables (taxedXtime) would control for this]. Finally, the estimated coefficient on  $\beta_7$  is our estimate of the triple difference estimate--it is the difference between two sets of changes in prices over time. First, we take the difference in the change in price of taxed beverages in Seattle relative to non-taxed beverages in Seattle. Then we subtract from that the difference between the change in price in taxed beverages in the comparison area and the change in price for non-taxed beverages in the comparison area.

This is the estimate of the impact of the tax on taxed beverages above and beyond any changes in the price of non-taxed beverages. It is of secondary interest because changes in the price of non-taxed beverages in Seattle (which we difference out in the triple difference estimate) could be a result of the tax itself (and therefore should not be differenced out to estimate tax impacts) or to prices in Seattle rising faster than prices in the comparison area.

Finally, we present a pooled model, unstratified by beverage or store type, giving the overall pooled impact, although this estimate should be interpreted with caution since the unweighted pooled estimate is influenced by how many beverages were collected at each store type.

In all models, we include only stores that we surveyed at both time points in the model. Our primary models examine all beverages that were surveyed in these stores at either time point. In sensitivity models, we limit our models to include only beverages that were measured at both time points in a store.

We use these same difference-in-difference models to estimate the degree to which prices of packaged food and healthier food changed more in Seattle compared to the comparison area in this time period.

In sensitivity analyses, we 1) limited the difference-in-difference analyses to include only beverages that we observed in each store at both time points, and 2) used difference-in-difference models by beverage size to identify how prices changed in association with the tax by beverage size.

After finding that the prices of some untaxed beverages increased in some store types, we did additional analyses to further probe whether this finding was universal across store subtypes and beverage types. Specifically, we categorized grocery stores, small stores and drug stores according to whether they were chain stores or not. For small stores, we additionally categorized them according to whether they were gas stations or not. We then re-ran the difference-in-difference analyses according to beverage type within these store categories.

Secondary descriptive analyses.

To describe the variety and frequency of tax implementation strategies, we tabulate frequencies of the five “pricing types” we observed by beverage and by store.

RESULTS

Box 1. Statistical definitions

Difference-in-difference. The difference-in-difference in this context can be interpreted as the impact of the tax on prices for taxed beverages, if we assume that the trend in the comparison area is a reasonable substitute for the trend we would have expected in Seattle, had Seattle not passed the Sweetened Beverage Tax. Mathematically, it is equivalent to subtracting the change in prices over this time period in the comparison area from the change in prices over this time period in Seattle.

Triple difference. The triple difference is of secondary importance in this context. The triple-difference (the difference-in-difference-in-difference) further subtracts out changes in the price of untaxed beverages from changes in taxed beverages. In this context, this can be interpreted as the average differential change in price between taxed and untaxed goods in Seattle above and beyond the average differential change in price between these goods in the comparison area. Mathematically, it is equivalent to subtracting the change in the price of non-taxed beverages in Seattle from the change in price of taxed beverages in Seattle, and from that, further subtracting the difference between the change in price in non-taxed beverages in the comparison area and the change in price for taxed beverages in the comparison area.

Of the 458 stores include in our sample at baseline (pre-tax), 413 (90%) were re-surveyed during the 6-month post-tax follow up visit (Table 2). Fourteen (3%) were permanently closed when we returned and 31 (7%) refused to participate.

IMPACT OF THE TAX ON AVERAGE TAXED AND NON-TAXED BEVERAGE PRICES ACCORDING TO BEVERAGE TYPE

Table 4 displays the change in price by beverage type in Seattle and the comparison area as well as the difference-in-difference (i.e., the degree to which the prices in Seattle changed above and beyond the price changes in the comparison area – the change in Seattle prices minus the change in the comparison area prices). The price of all taxed beverages (except sugary syrup add-ons in coffee shops) increased significantly in Seattle, while small non-statistically significant changes in price for these same beverages were seen in the comparison area. The difference-in-difference indicated the pass-through of the tax was more than 100% on average for soda [DD: 1.78 (95% CI: 1.58, 1.99)] and energy drinks [DD: 1.95 (95% CI: 1.37, 2.52)]. Price pass-through was lower (84%) for bottled sugar-sweetened tea [DD: 1.48 (95% CI: 1.06, 1.89)], 84% for sports beverages [DD: 1.47 (95% CI: 1.17, 1.78)], and 62% for bottled sugar-sweetened coffee drinks [DD: 1.09 (95% CI: 0.10, 2.09)]. Pass-through was 63% for juice beverages [DD: 1.11 (95% CI: 0.05, 2.16)].

Sugary syrups in coffee shops are included in our taxed category, but their tax status is ambiguous since retailers can provide a signed written statement to the distributor stating that the syrups will be added to drinks that have milk as their primary ingredient, and the distributor will not be taxed for these syrups. The average price of adding these syrups increased by just over 8 cents on average in Seattle and decreased by approximately 1 cent in the comparison area; however, the confidence intervals were wide and neither of these changes were statistically significantly different from zero. The difference-in-difference was also not statistically significant.

The price of several non-taxed sugar-free beverages also increased in Seattle between the pre-tax period and six months post-tax, including diet soda, diet energy drinks, bottled tea, and prepared coffee. This change in price in Seattle was statistically significantly greater than the change in price in the comparison area for diet soda [DD: 0.61 (95% CI: 0.39, 0.83)] and diet energy drinks [DD: 1.00 (95% CI: 0.41, 1.60)]. The difference-in-difference for prepared sugar-free coffee beverages was significant at the 0.10 level only [DD: 1.23 (95% CI: -0.05, 2.50)]. The difference for bottled sugar-free or diet teas was not statistically significant [DD: 0.24 (95% CI: -0.39, 0.86)], nor was that for diet sports drinks [DD: 0.35 (95% CI: -0.08, 0.78)]. For milk, the price per ounce decreased significantly in the comparison area, leading to a significantly greater increase in price in Seattle as compared to the comparison area [DD: 0.32 (95% CI: 0.02, 0.62)].

Among the sugary beverages that are not subject to the tax, there were significant increases in price per ounce in Seattle between the pre-tax period and six months post-tax for prepared sugar-sweetened coffee. The change in Seattle was marginally significantly greater than the change in the comparison area for prepared sugar-sweetened coffee beverages [DD: 0.83 (95% CI: -0.08, 1.74)].

The difference-in-difference indicated the pass-through of the tax was more than 100% on average for soda and energy drinks. Price pass-through was lower (84%) for bottled sugar-sweetened tea, 84% for sports beverages, and 62% for bottled sugar-sweetened coffee drinks. Pass-through was 63% for juice beverages.

<sup>2</sup> Difference between taxed and non-taxed is not calculated for coffee shops because of different units (i.e., price per syrup shot vs. price per ounce for non-taxed coffee drinks)

Among Seattle supermarkets and superstores, average pass-through for taxed beverages was 1.51 cents per ounce or 86% of the price of the tax. Non-taxed beverages prices did not change significantly in these stores. The differential change for taxed versus non-taxed beverages in Seattle versus the comparison area (the triple difference) was 1.54 cents per ounce (95% CI: 1.25, 1.84).

Among Seattle supermarkets and superstores, average pass-through for taxed beverages was 1.51 cents per ounce or 86% of the price of the tax. Non-taxed beverages prices did not change significantly in these stores.

Among grocery stores and drug stores, the price of both taxed and non-taxed beverage increased significantly more in Seattle as compared to the change in price in the comparison area. For taxed beverages, the average pass-through was more than 100% of the tax price at 1.82 cents per ounce (95% CI: 1.33, 2.31). For non-taxed beverages in these stores, prices increased in Seattle above and beyond price increases in the comparison area by 0.47 cents per ounce on average (95% CI: 0.08, 0.85). Because the price of non-taxed beverages in Seattle increased substantially, the differential change for taxed versus non-taxed beverages in Seattle versus the comparison area (the triple difference) was lower, at 1.35 cents per ounce (95% CI: 0.87, 1.84). In practical terms, this indicates that the six-months post-tax price differential between taxed versus non-taxed beverages at these stores is not as great as the same price differential between these beverages at the larger supermarkets and superstores.

The findings for small stores were very similar to those for grocery and drug stores. Specifically, the price of both taxed and non-taxed beverages increased significantly more in Seattle, compared to the comparison area. In the case of small stores, the pass-through on taxed beverages was approximately 103% of the price of the tax on average, or 1.80 cents per ounce (95%CI: 1.36, 2.24). The price of non-taxed beverages increased by 0.77 cents more per ounce in Seattle compared to the comparison area (95% CI: 0.30, 1.24). As in the grocery and drug stores, because the price of non-taxed beverages in Seattle increased substantially, the differential change for taxed versus non-taxed beverages in Seattle compared to the comparison area (the triple difference) was lower than in supermarkets/superstores, at 1.03 cents per ounce (95% CI: 0.54, 1.52).

In the warehouse stores, there is substantial variation in the estimate of the change in price. While the average change indicates that prices on taxed beverages increased by 134% of the tax amount after netting out the change in the comparison area, this change is not statistically significant because of the large variation in price changes ( $DD_{\text{taxed}}$ : 2.34 (95% CI: -3.72, 8.40). The difference-in-difference for the non-taxed beverages in these stores also did not reach statistical significance [ $DD_{\text{non-taxed}}$ : -0.40 (95% CI: -3.91, 3.12)]. Because our sample contains only two warehouse stores, the number of observations in these models is relatively small.

The findings for small stores were very similar to those for grocery and drug stores. Specifically, the price of both taxed and non-taxed beverages increased significantly more in Seattle, compared to the comparison area. In the case of small stores, the pass-through on taxed beverages was approximately 103% of the price of the tax on average, or 1.80 cents per ounce (95%CI: 1.36, 2.24). The price of non-taxed beverages increased by 0.77 cents more per ounce in Seattle compared to the comparison area (95% CI: 0.30, 1.24).

In coffee shops, we report on the price of the caloric flavor syrup that can be added to coffee drinks as the taxed beverage. However, its tax status is ambiguous. While the tax regulations state that “‘Sweetened beverage’ does not include...any beverage in which natural milk is the primary ingredient, in other words, the ingredient listed first in the product ingredient list; or in which water and grains, nuts, legumes, or seeds constitute the first two ingredients in the product ingredient list” (Ord. 125324, § 2, 2017. Section 5.53.020), retailers must provide a signed written statement to the distributor certifying the number of bottles of syrup that will be used for beverages where the first ingredient is milk. If the distributor does not receive this signed statement from the retailer, then the distributor is still responsible for paying the tax on these syrup bottles. Although the average price of additional caloric flavor syrup at coffee shops in Seattle increased by 8.12 cents, this price increase varied considerably (95% CI: -5.17, 21.41), and was not statistically significant. However, the price of non-taxed coffee beverages increased more in Seattle than in the comparison area and this increase was marginally statistically significant ( $DD_{\text{non-taxed}}$ : 4.14 cents per ounce (95% CI: -0.01, 8.29)).

In quick-service restaurants, the price of taxed beverages increased significantly more in Seattle compared to the comparison area – by 1.43 cents per ounce (95% CI: 0.25, 2.62), or 82% of the price of the tax. Non-taxed beverages in these restaurants also increased on average by 0.64 cents per ounce in Seattle versus the comparison area; however, this varied widely and the price change was not statistically significant. The increase in the price of both taxed and non-taxed beverages led to a lower triple difference (the differential price increase in the taxed beverages compared to the non-taxed beverages in Seattle versus the comparison area), which was not statistically significant [DDD: 0.80 (95% CI: -1.34, 2.93)].

IMPACT OF THE TAX ON AVERAGE TAXED AND NON-TAXED BEVERAGE PRICES, ESTIMATES POOLED ACROSS STORE AND BEVERAGE

Table 6 displays the mean price (in cents per ounce) of all taxed and non-taxed beverages pre-tax and six months post-tax, as well as the difference-in-difference for the change in prices in Seattle compared to the change in prices in the comparison area for both taxed and non-taxed beverages. In the pooled estimate for beverages subject to the tax, the difference-in-difference indicates that prices increased an average of 1.70 cents more per ounce (95% CI: 1.46, 1.94) in Seattle than in the comparison area. The difference-in-difference for the taxed beverages of 1.70 cents per ounce indicates that, aggregated across store type and beverage type, the tax was passed through at an average of 97%.

The price of beverages not subject to the tax (including those with low-to-no sugar sweetening and those with sugar sweetening) also increased significantly more ( $DD_{\text{non-taxed}}$ : 0.42 cents per ounce (95% CI: 0.18, 0.66)) in Seattle compared to the comparison area.

The difference between the net increase in taxed beverage prices versus the net increase in non-taxed beverages was statistically significant (DDD: 1.28 cents per ounce (95% CI: 1.02, 1.54)).

The pooled estimates should be interpreted with caution since the overall average is a function of the number of beverages surveyed in each type of store, which may not reflect the proportion of beverages bought at each store. For example, if households buy 70% of their beverages in supermarkets, but supermarkets only represent 30% of the observations in this model, the models stratified by store type will be more relevant.

SENSITIVITY ANALYSES AND SECONDARY ANALYSES

Sensitivity analyses.

In sensitivity analyses, limiting the difference-in-difference analyses to include only beverages that we observed in each store at both time points yielded substantively similar results (Appendix B Supplemental Table 1). Our analyses for three common beverage sizes found that the average pass-through was lowest for two-liter bottles [DD: 1.51 (95% CI: 1.28, 1.74)], higher for 20 oz bottles [DD: 1.84 (95% CI: 1.59, 2.08)], and highest for 12 packs [DD: 2.00 (95% CI: 1.68, 2.33)] (Appendix B , Supplemental Tables 2-4).

Additional analyses to examine the increase in price of non-taxed beverages.

Table 7 displays the difference-in-difference estimates for grocery stores according to whether or not they are a chain, small stores according to whether or not they are a chain, small stores according to whether they sell gas (gas stations), and drug stores (which are all chains). The average price of non-taxed beverages did not increase significantly in grocery stores (either chain or non-chain) nor did it increase in small stores that do not sell gas and are not chains. The significant average increase in the prices of non-taxed beverages are limited to drug stores, chain small stores and small stores that sell gas. In these stores, looking specifically by beverage type, prices increased consistently for diet soda and diet energy drinks. Prices increased for diet sports beverages as well, although this only reached statistical significance in chain small stores and gas stations. Similarly, bottled unsweetened tea increased also significantly in price in these two types of stores. The price of bottled water did not increase in any of these store types and the price of milk only increased significantly in non-chain small stores.

The significant average increase in the prices of non-taxed beverages are limited to drug stores, chain small stores and small stores that sell gas. In these stores, looking specifically by beverage type, prices increased consistently for diet soda and diet energy drinks.

Secondary analyses.

Changes in the price of select foods.

Finally, we collected prices from a sample of packaged goods and a handful of healthier fresh foods to see if the prices of these goods also changed differentially in Seattle versus the comparison area. We thought that distributors or retailers might decide to distribute the price of the tax over many goods. Alternatively, increases in Seattle might indicate that the price of goods is rising faster in Seattle compared to the comparison area. We found that none of the prices of snack foods or healthy foods increased significantly more in Seattle as compared to the comparison area. The price of eggs increased significantly more in the comparison area as compared to Seattle (Table 8).

Seattle bubble tea shops.

We included bubble tea shops in the sample because these beverage stores use the same syrups as coffee shops. However, because we were unable to resurvey any bubble tea shops in our comparison area, we present just the change in the price of bubble teas for Seattle.

Table 9 displays the change in price from pre-tax to six months post-tax for bubble tea shops in Seattle. In Seattle bubble tea shops, the price of taxed bubble tea drinks (e.g., non-milk-based sugar-sweetened teas) increased by 0.99 cents per ounce (95% CI: -0.23, 2.21), which was only significant at the 0.10 level. The price of non-taxed sugar-free bubble tea drinks (e.g., milk-based bubble tea with sugar-free syrup or powder, plain tea, 100% fruit smoothies) did not change significantly [DD: 0.13 (95% CI: -0.51, 0.78)]; non-taxed sugar-sweetened bubble tea drinks (e.g., milk-based sugar-sweetened bubble teas) decreased by 0.58 cents per ounce (95% CI: -2.31, 1.14), but this was not statistically significant.

Implementation.

We identified five strategies Seattle stores used to alert consumers to the tax (see Figures 3.1-3.5 above). Many stores used more than one implementation strategy. For this reason, we first present price-type frequencies by beverages. Of taxed beverages, 45% of beverages for sale made no mention of the tax on the price tag (Figure 3, pricing type #1); any added tax was already included in the shelf price. Of the 55% of taxed beverages where price tags mentioned the tax, the largest group (24% of all taxed beverages) included the tax in the total price on the price tag and identified it as added on (type #3). Another 17% of all taxed beverages had the tax added at the register and did not list the total price on the price tag (type #5); 11% of taxed beverages included the tax in the total price on the price tag but did not identify it as an add-on (type #4); 2% of taxed beverages had the price written on the price tag as an add-on amount only, without incorporating it into the total price (type #2), and 2% fell into the 'other' category, meaning the tax was mentioned on the price tag but did not fall into any of the other categories (see Table 10). Of non-taxed beverages, 97% of price tags had no mention of the tax; 3% of non-taxed beverages did have an identified tax add-on or some mention of the tax on the price tag.

DISCUSSION

Six months after the implementation of Seattle’s Sweetened Beverage Tax, we observed that, when averaged across all store types and taxed beverage types, the price of beverages subject to the tax increased by 1.70 cents per ounce above and beyond changes in the price of taxed beverages in the comparison area. Since the tax is 1.75 cents per ounce, this indicates 97% price pass-through of the tax on average. Averaging across store types, prices increased significantly for all beverage types subject to the tax except one – the caloric flavor-syrup add-on at coffee shops. These average changes mask some nuances by beverage type and by store/restaurant type. For example, the mean pass-through rate by beverage type ranged from 62% for bottled sugary coffee beverages to 111% for energy drinks; the pass-through rate for soda was 102%.

When comparing the taxed beverage price increases by store type, we found that in supermarkets and superstores, only the price of taxed beverages increased in Seattle, compared to the comparison area, and the average pass-through was 86%. In grocery stores, drug stores, and small stores, however, the average pass-through for taxed beverages was more than 100%, and the price of non-taxed beverages also increased significantly.

In quick-service restaurants, only the price of taxed beverages increased in Seattle compared to the comparison area. In coffee shops, the sugary flavor syrup add-on did not increase significantly; however the price of non-taxed coffee drinks increased in Seattle above and beyond changes seen in the comparison group and was statistically significant at the 0.10 level.

Interestingly, the price of non-taxed sugar-free beverages also increased in Seattle significantly more than in the comparison area. However, this price increase was only about 25% of the increase of price among taxed beverages. There are two potential explanations for the increase in the price of non-taxed sugar-free beverages. First, the prices of goods in Seattle could be rising at a pace that far outstrips the rate of increase in the comparison area. We think this explanation is unlikely because we did not find any evidence that prices of packaged foods or healthy foods in these same stores changed differentially for Seattle compared to the comparison area. Instead, it seems more likely that Seattle is experiencing spillover effects from taxed to non-taxed beverages. If so, this could either be due to misunderstandings by distributors or storeowners and managers about which beverages are subject to the tax, or it could reflect an intentional decision to sell these non-taxed products at a higher price.

In the models pooled over store type, the average increase in price per ounce of non-taxed beverages in Seattle compared to the comparison area appears to be a function of smaller stores (grocery, drug stores and small stores) increasing the price of beverages that are not subject to the tax.

Six months after the implementation of Seattle's Sweetened Beverage Tax, we observed that, when averaged across all store types and taxed beverage types, the price of beverages subject to the tax increased by 1.70 cents per ounce above and beyond changes in the price of taxed beverages in the comparison area....

To better describe these price increases for non-taxed beverages, we ran additional analyses by subtypes of small stores, grocery stores, and drug stores (according to whether they were chains or not and sold gas or not) and found that the price increase in non-taxed beverages in these store categories stems primarily from price increases in gas stations, drug stores, and chain convenience stores. The average price of non-taxed beverages did not increase significantly in grocery stores (either chain or non-chain) nor did it increase in small stores that do not sell gas and are not chains. In these subtypes of stores, the price increases among non-taxed beverages appears to be due to increases in the price of diet soda, diet energy beverages, and to a lesser extent bottled tea, diet sports beverages. The price of bottled water did not increase and, in the majority of store types, the price of milk also did not increase.

In addition to calculating the difference-in-difference for price changes in Seattle of taxed beverages compared to price changes in the comparison group, we also differenced out the change in the price of non-taxed beverages in Seattle compared to the comparison area (the triple difference). In the small stores and grocery/drug stores, the triple difference was lower in magnitude than the difference-in-difference. This is due to the fact that prices of non-taxed beverages in Seattle rose substantially in these store types. This means that consumers in Seattle in stores that raised the prices of non-taxed beverages will not see as large of a price differential between taxed and non-taxed beverages, which could have implications for how the tax will affect the propensity to consume sugary beverages.

The survey of pricing types revealed that 45% of beverages have no indication of the tax on their shelf tag. Based on our findings that, on average, 97% of the price of the tax was passed-through to consumers, it is likely that for beverages with no mention of the tax, prices have increased and a consumer would observe this when comparing the price of sugar-sweetened to non-sugar-sweetened beverages (i.e., the tax is most likely incorporated into the price without explicit mention of it on the tag). The remaining 55% percent of beverages explicitly mention the tax on the shelf tag; in 36% of beverages, the amount of the tax or the total amount to be paid including the tax was visible on the shelf tag.

Conclusions.

Overwhelmingly, these findings point to the tax being at least partially passed through on taxed beverages six months after implementation. The average rate of pass-through for taxed beverages varied by beverage type, ranging from 62 to 111%, and averaging 97% pass-through. Whereas in Seattle supermarkets and superstores only the price of beverages subject to the tax increased (beyond changes seen in the comparison area), in smaller stores (grocery stores, drug stores and small stores), particularly chain convenience stores and gas stations, the price of both taxed and non-taxed beverages increased (beyond changes seen in the comparison area). Additionally, the pass-through rate was higher among these small stores as compared to large supermarkets and superstores. Finally, the price of taxed beverages in Seattle counter service restaurants also increased significantly compared with changes in the comparison area, with a pass-through rate of 84%. In sum, these findings suggest that, while there is some heterogeneity by beverage type and store type, overall, Seattle's Sweetened Beverage tax is associated with a substantial increase in the price of taxed beverages.

Limitations.

This study has limitations that should be noted. Although we surveyed a large sample of beverages of various sizes, we did not measure all beverages. Average price changes presented are not weighted according to the average frequency at which the population shops for beverages at each store type; however, we present analyses stratified by store type to allow for heterogeneity in the price changes according to store type. Also, although we include a large sample of stores in Seattle and our comparison area, we have only a sample of stores rather than a census of all stores. We did not include some popular grocery stores such as Whole Foods, Trader Joe's, and PCC because these stores devote relatively little shelf space to sugary beverages. We were not able to survey a prepared coffee beverage that would be always subject to the tax, since coffee-shop beverages that contain sugary syrup also tend to have milk as the primary ingredient and are therefore eligible for exemption from the tax. We also were unable to include bubble tea stores in the comparison area at follow-up and instead were limited to examining only the change in price of these beverages in Seattle.

FUTURE WORK & CONSIDERATION FOR ONGOING EVALUATION

We plan to re-visit these stores again between October and November 2018 to match the timing of our pre-tax data collection. This will allow us to determine whether there are seasonal effects of prices, whether the pass-through rate becomes more uniform for all taxed beverages, and whether findings related to increased prices of non-taxed beverages are sustained.

APPENDIX A | STORE DEFINITIONS

SBT Retail Audit
Store Type Definitions

Grocery & Food Stores

- 1) Warehouse – Warehouses carry a wide array of products usually including clothing, household items, and often children’s items such as toys. Warehouses specialize in bulk size products. The only warehouse in our sample is Costco.
- 2) Supermarket or Superstore – To qualify as a supermarket, the store must 1) sell fresh meat (uncooked, unprocessed, not frozen meat, not fish/seafood, not packaged deli meat), 2) have four or more cash registers (including self-checkout), and 3) have at least two of the following services: butcher, bakery and/or deli. The butcher, bakery and deli must be staffed service counters (i.e., availability of fresh bread and/or fresh meat does not count if there is not a separate, staffed service counter). Examples of supermarkets include Safeway, QFC, and Metropolitan Market. Superstores carry a wide array of products usually including clothing, household items, and often children’s items such as toys. Some general merchandize stores may also have a grocery or supermarket within the store. Examples include Target and Walmart.
- 3) Grocery Store – To qualify as a grocery store, the store must 1) sell fresh meat (uncooked, unprocessed, not frozen meat, not fish/seafood, not packaged deli meat) and 2) not meet all of the criteria for being a supermarket. Examples of grocery stores include Red Apple, Pioneer Square Market, Viet-Wah, and some ethnic and “mom-and-pop” food stores.
- 4) Small Stores – Store types a-d qualify as “small stores.” These stores do not sell fresh meat. They may, but typically do not, have deli and/or bakery service counters. Please note there should not be butcher or fresh meat service counters and this is why they are identified as small stores.
  - a. Chain Convenience – This includes small chain stores that sell an edited selection of staple groceries and other convenience items, i.e., ready-to-heat and ready-to-eat foods. They often sell fresh milk and may have a deli or sell some processed meats (hot dogs, cold cuts, etc.) and other hot foods. Convenience stores are typically open long hours. Examples of convenience stores are 7-Eleven and Plaid Pantry. In this study, based on pre-screening, we will indicate chain versus non-chain status for field workers.
  - b. Non-Chain Convenience – This includes small, independently-owned stores that sell an edited selection of staple groceries and other convenience items, i.e., ready-to-heat and ready-to-eat foods. They often sell fresh milk and may have a deli or sell some processed meats (hot dogs, cold cuts, etc.) and other hot foods. Convenience stores are typically open long hours. Please note that corner stores will also be classified as non-chain convenience stores. Examples include Union Market, and many ethnic and “mom and pop” stores.
  - c. Discount Store – This includes small stores that sell a variety of goods like household, personal, and party supplies and household cleaning products, as well as some food and beverages, typically at discounted prices. We will include stores that have the word “dollar” or “discount” in the title. Examples include Dollar General and Dollar Tree.
  - d. Gas Station – This includes the quick-stop shops at gas stations. Gas station shops sell a selection of snacks, beverages, convenience items, and ready-to-heat and ready-to-eat foods. They may sell a selection of staple groceries. To be a gas station store, these stores must have gas pumps connected to the store. A few stores, such as 7-11s, can be both “gas stations” and “chain convenience stores.” The distinction is the presence of gas pumps. Examples include AMPM, 76, or Shell.
- 5) Drug Store/Pharmacy – This includes stores that sell prescription and over the counter medication, as well as additional merchandise including food and beverages. Examples include Walgreens, CVS, and Rite Aid.

Beverage Stores

- 1) Coffee Shop – A small café that serves primarily coffee as well as other drinks. Usually but does not have to serve simple foods. Can be a separate building, or inside of a larger store or restaurant. Can be a drive-thru or a walk-in café. If it is a drive-thru only coffee stand, only survey if the coffee stand has a menu that is visible to the exterior. If there is no exterior menu, do not survey the shop.

- 2) Bubble Tea Shop – A small café that serves primarily bubble tea as well as other drinks, including coffee. Can serve simple food. Can be a separate building, or inside of a larger store or restaurant.

Fast Food / Quick Service

- 1) Quick Service Chain – A restaurant that serves fast food cuisine and has minimal table service. Food is usually offered from a limited menu, cooked or prepped in bulk in advance and kept hot, finished and packaged to order, and usually available for take away, though seating may be provided. “Fast casual” are also included in this category, and tend to have more seating, and food items that are made-to-order. “Chain” quick-service refer to national fast-food brands (e.g., McDonalds, Dairy Queen, Taco Bell).
- 2) Quick Service Non-Chain – A restaurant that serves fast food cuisine and has minimal table service. Food is usually offered from a limited menu, cooked in bulk in advance and kept hot, finished and packaged to order, and usually available for take away, though seating may be provided. “Fast casual” are also included in this category, and tend to have more seating as well as food items that are made-to-order. “Non-chain” quick-service refers to chains that are not national chains / brands. Local chains (e.g., Dicks, Pagliacci Pizza) are included in this category.
