| Background: Daniel Godfrey rents a shoebox in Lower Queen Anne, which he shares with too many plants. Raised in the Seattle Area before moving to the city for university, he has been renting in various neighborhoods for the last six years. Daniel studied Medical Anthropology at the University of Washington, where he spent his time on chronic pain research and community work at grassroots organizations combating inequity. After graduation, he traveled on a Bonderman Fellowship examining global economic inequality. Grounded by Covid-19, he returned for a brief stint as a forklift driver in South Seattle, before working as a Housing Case Manager at a local non-profit. Now, he serves individuals experiencing homelessness as a Case Manager with the LEAD Program. Daniel believes that Seattle should be affordable and accessible for individuals of any background, and that the harm gentrification can do to communities should be mitigated by intentional, thoughtful policy. | | |
