Background: Jamie is a passionate environmental and climate justice educator, policy advocate, program director, community organizer, facilitator, and speaker. She has over a decade of experience working in environmental justice-related fields, including youth programming, leadership development, intergenerational immigrants & refugee programs, affordable housing & community development, food justice, air quality & environmental health, and creation of equitable community partnerships. As a movement builder, she is always looking for ways to support new leaders, and strategize around affecting change. From working with youth in the Chinatown/International District to leading leadership development programming for an API community organization, she has long been committed to building the next generation of BIPOC environmental leaders. From 2016-2021, she led the development of a first ever climate justice framework as part of King County's 2020 Strategic Climate Action Plan, and created the Climate Equity Community Task Force, to center frontline communities and BIPOC voices in community-driven climate policy-making. Her next ventures involve scaling up impact on environmental justice, equitable processes, and developing BIPOC leaders. She currently serves as the Associate Climate Director for the Nature Conservancy of Washington.
