Background: Laurie Rocello Torres' work with social justice began when they moved to Seattle in 2013 for a year long service fellowship with Puget Sound Sage after graduating with a Bachelors in Organizational Communications from Bradley University. They are passionate about equitable transit oriented development and anti-displacement work. They have done work around environmental, economic, gender, racial and transformative justice in the community. In their free time, Laurie loves to sing, dance, and teach a community self-defense and wellness class for queer and trans people of color called Building Autonomy and Safety for Everybody (BASE). They also currently serve as the Deputy Secretary General of GABRIELA Seattle, a collective of Pin@ya who do cultural and political education work around labor issues impacting Filipino migrant workers. They are also a member of Got Green's Young Workers in the Green Movement. They are currently a Language Access Coordinator at API Chaya, an organization that provides culturally competent services to survivors of Domestic Violence, Sexual Assault, and Human Trafficking in the Asian Pacific Islander Community. Language access is a renter's issue that they would like to advocate for.
